Katherine Venturo-Conerly, A.B.

Doctoral Student, Harvard University

Katherine Venturo-Conerly (she/her) is a first-year doctoral student at the Harvard Laboratory for Youth Mental Health. She graduated from Harvard College with an A.B. in psychology and a minor in global health and health policy. Her research focuses on developing, testing, and disseminating mental health interventions for low-resource youth internationally, with the aim of providing these youths with access to effective mental health care. She has a related interest in researching scalable alternatives to traditional long-form psychotherapy, including digital mental health interventions and brief interventions. Ms.

Venturo-Conerly co-founded and serves as the scientific director of the Shamiri Institute, a nonprofit dedicated to developing, testing, and disseminating scalable mental health and wellness interventions for low-resource youth in Kenya and beyond.
